I don't believe we need to "safeguard high quality recreation experiences". That is up to every person. Anyone who can ride a mountain bike to the top of the Gallatin Range can also walk or backpack there, and their experience will be safer because they will not be run off the trail by motorized or mechanized travelers.

This is not just "any" Forest -- it is a part of the unique Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem, and deserves full Wilderness protection of all of at least 230,000 acres as presented in Alternative D. There are plenty of places to use for motorized and mechanized recreation outside critical wildlife habitat.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.
