Comments:

Montana's Custer Gallatin National Forest, to include the Gallatin Range, is at risk. Its precious grizzlies, moose, bighorn sheep, mountain goats, and gray wolves have shown themselves dangerously stressed and imperiled at the slightest human disturbances. And yet it has been seriously proposed that the area become available to the pollution of noise, fumes, and wilderness-scarring motorized vehicles for the amusement of humanity.

Alternative D of the draft plan should strictly enforce the eight head of stock and twelve person rule in all wilderness areas. Moreover, it should address the contamination of Beartooth Plateau's lakes and streams by human and pack animal waste. Finally, grazing allotments and trails in pristine wilderness should not stand.
