The Roadless Rule requires all land of at least 5000 acres to be managed as wilderness. I hope your new management plan will do that.

Since 1990, I have vacationed in Montana 14 times. I would have said 18 times if it were not for family issues and injuries.

I come for the scenery, the fresh air and clean water to fly fish, hike and backpack. If I am going to visit Montana and spend money on local businesses such as fishing guides, gas stations, grocery stores and motels, I need wilderness and wilderness quality lands. I believe the national forests should be managed for quiet recreational pursuits such as hunting, fishing, hiking, camping and canoeing and kayaking. Extractive industries and noisy recreational activities should be allowed only in those rare instances where they do not adversely affect quiet recreation.
